Introduction

The ICN Advisory Working Group's Market Studies Project (the Project) was proposed in June 2008. The aim of the Project was to survey and analyse ICN members' market studies experience, with a view to considering further work by the ICN in this field, possibly including:

- a guidance document for ICN members on market studies practice and process, and
- an examination of ICN members' experience in specific sectors of the economy.

In some countries, market studies have a long history. In the United States, they were initiated at the beginning of the 20th century, and in Japan, they have been conducted since 1947. Worldwide at least 40 competition authorities (out of the 100 plus ICN members that enforce some kind of competition law) use market studies as part of their portfolio of tools. For many of these authorities, market studies are a relatively new tool.

There has been one significant worldwide comparison of market studies, conducted by the OECD by way of a Roundtable on Market Studies in June 2008.

The OECD Roundtable concluded that market studies were generally performed for one of two reasons: either as a lead-in to enforcement action when anti-competitive behaviour is suspected in a sector but competition authorities do not know the exact nature and extent of the competition problem; or as a lead-in for competition advocacy, where no violation of competition law is suspected but it appears that the market is not functioning well for consumers. This may be due to public restrictions on competition or inefficient market equilibria. In such cases a market study can identify the root causes of any dampening of competition and formulate appropriate remedies. These can include recommendations to government or other decision makers for regulatory or policy change, or encouraging market participants to take voluntary action to stimulate competition.
